

ABSTRACT

An optically active compound having an unsaturated bond at an optically active binding site, wherein the unsaturated bond and a fluorescent substituent or a substituent capable of imparting fluorescence are united in a conjugated manner; and a chiral sensor comprising the optically active compound as defined above. The chiral sensor can highly selectively recognize a specified chiral compound in high sensitivity.